A WEEKLY PATRIOTIC PRAYER BULLETIN
MERGING PRAYER AND PATRIOTISM

Dear Watchman,

The days are getting shorter. In fact, they seem to just run together. We are fighting against time and the demonic forces. It can seem overwhelming. Here at Insight, we are also fighting for the funding to stay on television. The Lord spoke clearly to me when I was sick for three weeks to "Keep the television outreach first in your prayers and faith...they will reach those I've prepared to join you. Believe Me for 100 stations." It is hard to step out in faith. It takes winning in the spirit realm. Obeying the Lord means you identify with His righteousness. This can stir up hell against you. I've never experienced such joy and frustration at the same time. I wish we had a bigger army to turn back the tide of evil.

Recently, I've received a lot of cards and letters from partners suffering from health issues. Just know I'm praying for you. I read all of my mail personally and when you ask me to pray I do. We also pray over them in the Leesburg, Florida prayer meeting each week. We have seen many answered prayers! When you sow a prayer, you reap a prayer! Praise the Lord!

Operation Battle Cry is nearing launch. Last week, I reported on how billions of our federal tax dollars are being embezzled through federal agencies via phony environmental law suits. "The 1980 Equal Access to Justice Act began with good intentions, but in recent years, has suffered from a lack of transparency. Originally the act was "spot on," it was a good thing for people who have been correctly wronged, but it has been hijacked in recent years by many environmental groups," said Glen Jones, Director of Research Education and Policy Development.

We must identify the spirits stationed over our nation. We must keep our faith in the power that rests in the blood of Jesus and the authority of His Name. Every day we must proclaim "Yeshua is Lord over America!" I feel we are dealing with a "mocking spirit." Satan hates those who refuse to compromise. He hates those of us who are in tune with the Holy Spirit and hear the voice of God. He uses subtle ways to torment or accuse us. Only through resisting and self-examination do we defeat him. I encourage you to sing songs of deliverance whether you feel delivered or not. "Let God arise and your enemies be scattered!" Let God fight your battles and you will always win!

It hard to watch people act as though they are committed Christians when you know they are not. It's dangerous to play games with God. I am reminded of one of my sisters. She was saved in her early 20s. She was very beautiful and could have married a wonderful committed Christian man. But, she met and fell in love with a man who was not saved and they married. Needless to say, her life was not what it could have been. He was a truck driver and gone a lot. She also had to work. They had two boys who needed baby sitters. He was not interested in her family or his. He did not like our family and we didn't see her as much after she married. When her youngest son was 17 and just out of high school he dived off a boat dock at his girlfriend's lake house and severed his spine. He was a quadriplegic at 17. It devastated all of us. At the time, we found out my sister was planning to file for divorce, but the accident changed everything. They stayed married all these years. They are now in their 80s. Her son passed away in his 40s undergoing a routine surgery. He never woke up from the anesthesia. We knew the Lord took him home. He had accepted the Lord and served him the rest of his days.

My sister and her husband were the caregivers until he died. But, they all had such a hard life. Choices bring consequences. Good and bad. Today, we are all making choices. Be careful what you choose. Seek God's will and guidance to make the right choices. God gives wisdom to those who ask.

If you are in a relationship that is unequally yoked, and need answers from God, let's agree together in prayer. If you have a child who is in a bad situation, let's intercede for them. Let's pray for deliverance from wicked rulers in authority. Please send me the names of those who need prayer and how we should pray and I will agree with you in prayer.

Scripture Reading

Mark 09:23 – 24: "If you can?" said Jesus. "Everything is possible for him who believes."

Immediately the boy's father exclaimed, "I do believe; help me overcome my unbelief!"

When Jesus saw that a crowd was running to the scene, he rebuked the evil spirit. "You deaf and mute spirit," he said, "I command you, come out of him and never enter him again." And straightway the father of the child cried out ...

As soon as he found it was put upon his faith, and that the issue of things would be according to that, he expressed himself with much vehemence, being in great distress; partly with indignation at his unbelief, and partly through fear of missing a cure, by reason of it: and said with tears; repenting of his unbelief, and grieved at the present weakness of his faith; which he very ingenuously confesses, saying, Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief; not forward, but out of the way: he found in himself some small degree of faith in the power of Christ, but it was mixed with much unbelief, through the greatness of the child's disorder; and therefore desires it might be removed from him, and he might be helped against it: he saw it was not in his own power to believe; nor had he strength of himself to oppose his unbelief; but that both faith must be given him, and power against unbelief. The Syriac version renders it, "help," "the defect of my faith," till up that which is lacking in it, it is very deficient, Lord, increase it; He found his faith very weak, he desires it might be strengthened, that he might be strong in faith, and give glory to God; and in this way belief is helped, or men helped against it: every believer, more or less, at one time or another, finds himself in this man's case; and also that it is necessary to make use of the same petition; for faith is but imperfect in this life, and often very weak.

Today, without faith it is impossible to see God. Our vision, hope and security is in our ability to have "faith." During the trying times I have experienced in moving our offices, and trying to get a foundation that will allow growth with efficiency and trust as well as maintaining our production and funds to stay on television, it is causing many sleepless nights. My prayer life has intensified because this is all bigger than me. Only God can sustain us. Only God can deliver America. OUR FAITH MUST INCREASE!

Activist Environmental Lawyers Bilking Millions from Taxpayers

By: Richard Pollock, Washington D.C. Editor, Pajamas Media, Washington D.C. Bureau Chief, PJTV

Without any oversight, accounting, or transparency, environmental activist groups have surreptitiously received at least $37 million from the federal government for questionable "attorney fees." The lawsuits they received compensation for had nothing to do with environmental protection or improvement.

The activist groups have generated huge revenue streams via the obscure Equal Access to Justice Act. Congressional sources claim the groups are billing for "cookie cutter" lawsuits - they file the same petitions to multiple agencies on procedural grounds, and under the Act, they file for attorney fees even if they do not win the case. Since 1995, the federal government has neither tracked nor accounted for any of these attorney fee payments.

Nine national environmental activist groups alone have filed more than 3,300 suits, every single one seeking attorney fees. The groups have also charged as much as $650 per hour (a federal statutory cap usually limits attorney fees to $125 per hour).

In well over half of the cases, there was no court judgment in the environmental groups' favor. In all cases, whether there was any possible environmental benefit from the litigation is highly questionable. Most cases were simply based upon an alleged failure to comply with a deadline or to follow a procedure.

A whistleblower who was employed for 30 years by the U.S. Forest Service told Pajamas Media: Some organizations have built a business doing this and attacking the agencies on process, and then getting "reimbursed."

This week a bipartisan group of congressional members introduced legislation to end the secrecy of the payments and force the government to open up the records to show exactly how much has been paid to the groups and the questionable attorney fees. The legislation was sponsored by Rep. Cynthia

Lummis (R-Wyoming), Rep. Stephanie Herseth Sandlin (D-SD), and Rep. Rob Bishop (R-Utah).

Congressional sources have said the disclosure was necessary to determine the extent of fraud and abuse. The $37 million is considered only a fraction of what has been paid out to the activist groups.

“For too long, taxpayers have unwittingly served as the financiers of the environmental litigation industry,” Rep. Bishop, who also is the chairman of the Congressional Western Caucus, said.

Rep. Herseth Sandlin remarked: “Simply put, this legislation is about ensuring good and open government.”

“It’s time to shine some light [on the program],” explained Rep. Lummis, who said the groups have created an industry that “supports their ‘stop everything’ agenda.”

The $37 million figure is considered low. It includes less than a dozen groups and only accounts for cases in 19 states and the District of Columbia. There are hundreds of eco-activist groups in the United States.

According to the whistleblower who served in the U.S. Forest Service, environmental activist groups typically file identical lawsuits to multiple agencies on procedural grounds, such as a missed deadline.

The identity of the huge revenue stream was established by the Western Legacy Alliance (“WLA”), along with Wyoming-based attorney Karen Budd-Falen. Western Legacy Alliance was founded in 2008 by ranchers and resource providers who raise beef and lamb on public lands of the West.

What they found was astounding.

Examining court records in 19 states and in the District of Columbia, the total amount paid to less than a dozen environmental groups exceeded $37 million. “This is just the tip of the iceberg,” says Budd-Falen. “We believe when the curtain is raised we’ll be talking about radical environmental groups bilking the taxpayer for hundreds of millions of dollars, all allegedly for ‘reimbursement for attorney fees.’ And what is even more maddening is that these groups are claiming that they are protecting the environment with all this litigation when not one dime of this money goes to projects that impact anything on-the-ground related to the environment. It just goes to more litigation to get more attorney fees to file more litigation.”

The whistleblower, speaking anonymously, told Pajamas Media the payments to the activists groups were “quite astronomical.” The former government agent was a line officer in a high-ranking position. That whistleblower added that the filings by the radical groups often were “canned” petitions that contained little research. In this way, environmental groups could pepper government agencies with a flood of lawsuits without much work.

“They will send a myriad of lawsuits across the bow to try to stop a number of projects or programs and then they hopefully will score with one or two,” he said. He saw a lot of the activist lawsuit filings because he had been attached both to the Forest Service’s Washington headquarters and to its field offices. “Then they will send in bills that are quite frankly, quite astronomical compared to the actual work they had to do to file an actual lawsuit. Many of the lawsuits are filed under a lot of canned material, yet the hours and rates that they charge were quite high.”

Here is a sampling of the number of assembly line “lawsuits” filed between 2000 and 2009 that have been painstakingly identified by the Western Legacy Alliance and Budd-Falen. Activist group Western Watersheds Project filed 91 lawsuits in the federal district courts; Forest Guardians (now known as WildEarth Guardians) filed 180 lawsuits; the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) filed 409 suits; the Wilderness Society filed 149 lawsuits; the National Wildlife Federation filed 427 lawsuits; and the Sierra Club filed 983 lawsuits. These numbers do not include administrative appeals or notices of intent to sue.

Even local or regional environmental groups have figured out ways to turn on the taxpayer spigot. WLA found the Idaho Conservation League filed 72 lawsuits and the Oregon Natural Desert Association filed 50. The Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance filed 88 lawsuits. At last count, just eight local groups in nine Western states have filed nearly 1,600 lawsuits against the federal government.

On the national level, over the last decade nine national environmental groups have filed 3,300 cases against the federal government. As is usual, the vast majority of the cases deal with the alleged procedural failings of federal agencies, not with substance or science.

Said the Forest Service officer: “A lot of times they will sue on process, and not on substance. And substance means what difference does it mean for the resource, or what’s going in on the ground? A lot of times, it will be a process lawsuit and a lot of times the agency either missed something. ... The bottom line is many, many times, when you look at the results on the ground, it [the environmental group winning the litigation] would have made very little difference.” Karen Budd-Falen said that the cases amounted to a ripoff of taxpayers and rewarded radical groups with millions of dollars. “Although those of us involved in protecting property rights and land use in the West were aware that radical groups were getting exorbitant fees simply by filing litigation against the government, we had no idea of the magnitude of the problem.”

Budd-Falen highlighted one case that typifies the gravy train that has flowed to environmental groups. In 2009, the Earthjustice Legal Foundation represented the Defenders of Wildlife, the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, and the Vermont Natural Resources Council in a case dealing with the process used by the Forest Service to adopt some regulations. The Earthjustice Legal Foundation filed for attorney fees for that single case that took only one year and three months to complete.

The same suit was filed by the Western Environmental Law Center on behalf of other environmental groups. The seven total attorneys who worked on the case billed the federal government $479,242. They charged between $300 to $650 per hour, far above the statutory federal cap of $125. The case was resolved at the district court level and the federal government did not appeal.

The Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) also files a significant amount of litigation and receives lucrative attorney fees. In Washington State Federal District Court alone, CBD received attorney fees totaling $941,000 for only six cases. In the District of Columbia, it received more than $1 million in fees.

Fourteen groups identified as recipients of the Act's funding are: the Sierra Club, Center for Biological Diversity, Colorado Environmental Coalition, Forest Guardians, National Wildlife Federation, Natural Resources Defense Council, Western Watersheds Project, Defenders of Wildlife, Alliance for the Wild Rockies, WildEarth, Oregon Natural Desert Association, Oregon Wild, Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance, and Wyoming Outdoor Council.

One of the fourteen groups, the Center for Biological Diversity, called the two Republicans and one Democrat "rabid right-wingers" and said that the charges of abuse was "patently false and patently ridiculous," according to Bill Snape, senior council for CBD.

Another study from Virginia Tech University discovered similar findings as a result of a comprehensive Freedom of Information Act request to five federal agencies. The Virginia Tech study also revealed that two of the agencies could provide absolutely no data on the Act's payments.

Environmental organizations are among the most financially prosperous non-profits in the country. The Sierra Club alone in 2007 reported its total worth as $56.6 million. According to 2007 Internal Revenue Service records, the top ten environmental presidents receive as much as a half million dollars a year in annual compensation. Fred Krupp, the president of the Environmental Defense Fund, Inc reported $492,000 in executive compensation in 2007. The top ten highest grossing environmental executives all received at least $308,000 in compensation.

Environmental activist groups also have been among the most influential in throwing around political money. According to the Center for Responsive Politics, between 2000 and this year activist environmental political action committees have given $3.4 million in campaign contributions to candidates for federal office. About 87% of the money went to Democrats.

Prayer Points

Psalms 27:2 When evil men advance against me to devour my flesh, when my enemies and my foes attack me, they will stumble and fall.

But you have planted wickedness, you have reaped evil, you have eaten the fruit of deception. Because you have depended on your own strength and on your many warriors, Do not be deceived: God cannot be mocked. A man reaps what he sows. New Living Translation (©2007)

Don't be misled--you cannot mock the justice of God. You will always harvest what you plant.

PRAY for the Fish and Wildlife Director Dan Ash to deny the WildEarth Guardians their request to list the Sand Dune Lizard as endangered on Dec. 14th.

ASK GOD to expose the recipients of bogus lawsuits channeling millions of tax payer dollars to Obama's friends who are corrupt lawyers using a legal loophole.

ASK GOD to empower Faye with Operation Battle Cry that will bring a massive media blitz to bring down the Department of Interior and the Fish and Wildlife's racketeering using the Endangered Species Act.

ASK GOD to deliver our oil, gas, coal, water, and air from Obama's power.

Ask God to bring the true identity of Obama to light, including his college records and passport copies.

ASK GOD to deliver us from "mockers" and release his "watchers" to bring down Eric Holder and expose his Islamic ties and lies concerning illegal immigration and Fast and Furious connections to give weapons to Mexican drug cartels.

PRAY for funds to come in to allow Faye to cover all 2011 expenses. Right now, we are $8,000 short. Pray for sponsors to come in to fund our TV broadcast this month, $6500.

PRAY for intercessors to increase in faith and watch God work the miraculous for them.

If you need a miracle healing, please send me your prayer request.
